After a degree in Latin American Studies Sarah Cameron has been travelling and writing on the Americas ever since, both as an economist and as an author for Footprint Handbooks. Initially moonlighting for the South American Handbook while working for a British bank, in 1990 she parted company with the world of finance and has been contributing to the expansion of Footprint titles ever since. Sarah still keeps her hand in with South America, collaborating with Ben Box on the South American Handbook, the Peru Handbook and Cuzco & the Inca Heartlands, but concentrates mainly on the Caribbean. She is the author of all 17 editions of Footprint Caribbean Islands, as well as individual island titles such as the Cuba Handbook, the Dominican Republic, Barbados, St Lucia and Antigua & the Leeward Islands. When Sarah is not travelling around the Caribbean sampling beaches and rum cocktails, she retreats to her 17th-century farmhouse in rural Suffolk, UK.

I did not find this small guide, at all, very helpful.

This was a fine guidebook, but we did not visit many of the sites. What the author failed to mention is that #1: as a white American, one does not feel comfortable driving one's rental car around the island. We have driven rental cars in many countries and never did we feel unwelcome. People either glared at us or harassed us to hire them. The tourists who seemed to be having a good time hired guides to take them around. #2: the roads were so twisty that it takes a long time to get from place to place. So that was also a deterrent to touring around. Note that we were on the east central part of the island. The residents were quite friendly and helpful at the hotels, restaurants, etc., just not when they were on the streets or on their porches. We would not return because of this. The island is beautiful.
