Gr 1-3 • The latest addition to this ongoing series takes on food. The topics bounce from one to the next like a marble in an arcade game: the author goes from describing companion planting to discussing corn and its many uses to examining how popcorn pops to exploring its historical use at the movies. Through chatty writing, Eliot provides historical details and simple scientific explanations and plies readers with questions, drawing them into the conversation: "Did you know?" "What's your favorite?" "Have you ever?" This compilation of fun, high-interest facts is matched by busy cartoon art that uses animals in place of humans.

VERDICT While the lack of photos may be off-putting to some, this title is a nice choice for younger readers. —Carol S. Surges, formerly at Longfellow Middle School, Wauwatosa, WI

Hannah Eliot is a children's book editor who lives in Manhattan, New York. Her favorite activities include editing (of course), writing, painting, and doodling all over every piece of notebook paper she uses. Aaron Spurgeon is a professional artist working in the animation industry.

Aaron's credits include Cloudy with a Chance of Meatballs 2 and the Mickey Mouse shorts, as well as several unreleased animation projects. When not working on movies, Aaron enjoys doing illustrations based on historical city locales and mentoring young artists. Aaron and his family live in Pasadena, California.
